MEMORANDUM

DATE: March 25, 2014

TO: All Members of the Delaware State Senate and House of Representatives

FROM: Ms. Daniese McMullin-Powell, Chairperson
State Council for Persons with Disabilities

RE: H.B. 196 (Source of Income)

The State Council for Persons with Disabilities (SCPD) has reviewed H.B. 196 which prohibits housing discrimination based on source of income by adding “source of income” as a protected class under the Delaware Fair Housing Act and the Landlord-Tenant Code. SCPD strongly endorses the proposed legislation.

ENDORSING AGENCIES

Apart from SCPD, the following agencies support the legislation adding Source of Income as a protected class under the Fair Housing Act and Landlord-Tenant Code: Delaware State Housing Authority; Delaware Department of Health & Social Services; Delaware State Human Relations Commission; Delaware Commission of Veteran Affairs; Delaware Housing Coalition; Delaware Council on Housing; Easter Seals Delaware/Maryland Eastern Shore; The Arc of Delaware; United Cerebral Palsy; Delaware Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society; Delaware HIV Consortium; Homeless Planning Council; CLASI/Disabilities Law Program; New Castle County Department of Community Services; Delaware Community Reinvestment Action Council; Provost Realty and Associates, Inc.; Delaware Fair Housing Task Force; Developmental Disabilities Council; Governor’s Advisory Council for Exceptional Citizens; Governor’s Council on the Blind; and Freedom Center for Independent Living.

BACKGROUND & EFFECT

As background, Delaware’s Fair Housing law bars discrimination based on the following twelve (12) bases: race, color, national origin, religion, creed, sex, marital status, familial status, age, sexual orientation, gender identity and disability. H.B. 196 would add a thirteenth basis: “source of income”. Consistent with the attached table, at least twelve (12) states and the District of Columbia bar housing discrimination based on source of income. The justification for such laws is that a legitimate source of a renter’s or home buyer’s income should be immaterial to real estate transactions. Many individuals rely on the government as a major source of their financial livelihood. Veterans may count on Veteran’s benefits. Seniors typically rely on Social Security Retirement income. Persons with disabilities may rely on Social Security Disability, SSI or housing vouchers. The Social Security Administration reports that almost 200,000 Delawareans are Social Security or SSI beneficiaries, 2/3 of whom are over 65. See attached statistics. Common private sources of unearned income include child support, spousal support, pensions, annuities, and reverse mortgage payments.

The bill’s definition of “source of income” (lines 9-14) would cover all of the above types of income. The ban on discrimination based on “source of income” does not “trump” legitimate reliance on other considerations. For example, the legislation (lines 63-65) contains the following explicit guidance:

(h) The prohibition in this chapter against discrimination based on source of income shall not limit the ability of any person to consider the sufficiency of income or credit rating of a renter or buyer, so long as sufficiency of income and credit requirements are applied in a commercially reasonable manner and without regard to source of income.

Historically, some landlords have objected to “source of income” legislation since they perceive that participation in government voucher and rental assistance programs may result in administrative burdens and compliance costs. The courts have generally rejected such arguments as unfounded, finding that administrative compliance is not burdensome, particularly considering the numerous rental property standards already imposed by state landlord-tenant codes. See attached Housing Law Bulletin, “Courts Consider Landlord Defenses to Source of Income Laws” (November/December, 2008). A recent article published by a landlord/property manager training site provides useful perspective. In a nutshell, landlords are instructed to simply adopt and fairly apply standards and treat lease prospects the same way, regardless of source of income. See attached Fair Housing Coach, “Do Your Local Laws Ban Discrimination Based on Source of Income?” (June 18, 2013). Compliance is not burdensome.

Finally, the public policy “value” of implementing Fair Housing laws outweighs minor burdens. For example, a landlord must allow tenants with disabilities to effect reasonable modifications of a dwelling to provide accessibility. Title 6 Del.C. §4603A. A landlord may incur interpreter costs when renting to a Deaf tenant who only communicates through American Sign Language or a tenant who only speaks Spanish or Chinese. Such perceived “burdens” are reasonable costs of doing business.

PUBLIC POLICY CONSIDERATIONS

The following public policy considerations underscore the advantages of H.B. 96.
First, Federal and State public policy support governmental assistance programs. They have been established for good reason and policies intended to undermine implementation of these government programs should be disfavored. Many families cannot afford market rents and rely on the subsidies for basic housing. For perspective, see attached March 24, 2014 press release and “Out of Reach 2014” report which conclude that Delaware is the 11th most expensive of the 50 states for renters. The press release notes that “59% of renter households (or 53,860) in Delaware do not earn enough income to afford a two-bedroom unit at the Fair Market Rent (FMR).”

Second, a high percentage of individuals receiving housing vouchers and government rent subsidies in Delaware have disabilities. Allowing discrimination based on use of a voucher/government subsidy may have a disparate impact or effect on persons with disabilities and therefore constitute banned discrimination based on disability. See Newark Landlord Association v. City of Newark, 2003 WL 21448560 (Del. Ch. 2003) (ordinance/law with disparate impact on protected class stricken). An explicit ban on discrimination based on source of income would clarify the law so both landlords and tenants have an easily understood benchmark.

Third, consistent with the attached p. 13 from the DOJ-DHSS settlement, the State is committed by judicial consent order to ensure the provision of “housing vouchers or subsidies and bridge funding” to hundreds of individuals. Indeed, by July 1, 2016, it must guarantee the “availability of such vouchers to anyone in the target population who needs such support.” If landlords are authorized to discriminate against housing voucher participants, the State may end up violating the consent decree.

Fourth, consistent with 16 DE Admin Code 6000, the Division of Social Services maintains an emergency assistance program which includes rent assistance for needy tenants. Under current law, landlords could refuse to participate and accept the rental assistance even if it brought a tenant current in rent. The landlord could simply initiate eviction of the tenant despite the proffer of funds.

Fifth, the Landlord-Tenant Code contains the following protection for victims of domestic abuse, sexual offenses and stalking:

(a) A landlord may not pursue any action for summary possession, demand any increase in rent, decrease any services, or otherwise cause any tenant to quit a rental unit where said tenant is a victim of domestic abuse, sexual offenses, or stalking, and where said tenant has obtained or has sought assistance for domestic abuse, sexual offenses, or stalking from any court, police, medical emergency, domestic violence, or sexual offenses program or service.

Title 25 Del.C. §5316. As a matter of public policy, landlords are expected to cooperate with such victimized tenants who have sought government assistance. Such assistance would normally include rent payments and other housing costs through the Attorney General’s State Victim Compensation Assistance Program (VCAP). See Title 11 Del.C. §9002(9)h. Banning discrimination based on source of income would reinforce §5316 by deterring landlords from refusing to accept VCAP funds. It would also protect tenants who rely on VCAP rental assistance when they are victims of violent crimes in contexts other than domestic violence of sexual offenses. For example, a renter who loses employment income due to injuries related to a mugging/assault will often rely on VCAP funds for rental assistance.

Sixth, the Landlord-tenant Code authorizes a landlord to establish separate utility meters for units. See Title 25 Del.C. §5312. The Code characterizes landlord charges for such utilities as "rent":

(e) "Charges for utility services made by a landlord to a tenant shall be considered rent for all purposes of this Code."

Tenants who experience difficulty paying utilities can avail themselves of government assistance programs, including the DSS Emergency Assistance Program and Energy Crisis Assistance Program [16 DE Admin Code 6000, §6005F]. Utility assistance would also be available through the VCAP [Title 11 Del.C. §9002(9)h]. Under current law, a landlord could refuse to accept such government rental assistance payments for utilities. Instead, the landlord could simply initiate eviction despite the proffer of full payment of utilities.

Seventh, the Department of Health & Social Services (DHSS) maintains a Money Follows the Person program to facilitate individuals in long-term care facilities transitioning to apartments or homes in the community. The MFP program pays for security deposits, utility costs, etc. and participants often have government rental assistance. Under current law, a landlord could refuse to accept vouchers and government funds for a security deposit and rent. This would undermine implementation of this important program and result in individuals unnecessarily languishing in nursing homes.

Eighth, consistent with the attachment, it appears that Dover Air Force Base military personnel receive a housing allowance which would ostensibly qualify as income derived from a government assistance program. As such, current law could authorize a landlord to refuse to rent to Dover AFB personnel.

Thank you for your consideration and please contact SCPD if you have any questions regarding our position or observations on this important legislation.

Old-Age (retirement), Survivors, and Disability Insurance (OASDI)—popularly referred to as Social Security—provides monthly benefits to an eligible worker and family members when the worker elects to start receiving retirement benefits or when the worker dies or becomes disabled. A worker's lifetime covered earnings largely determine the amount of benefits received.

Courts Consider Landlord Defenses to Source of Income Laws*

Over the past two years, courts have decided numerous cases where Section 8 voucher holders have sought enforcement of state and local laws that prohibit landlords from discriminating against tenants and applicants based upon source of income. Many of these cases have upheld local source of income statutes, rejecting landlord claims that local source of income laws are preempted. On what is usually the threshold question, courts have evaluated whether the state and local anti-discrimination protection covers the receipt of Section 8 assistance. Frequently, these cases have also addressed defenses raised by landlords that the rejection of a tenant with a Section 8 voucher was not discriminatory, but instead based upon legitimate reasons, such as burdensome program requirements, poor credit or insufficient income. The courts have usually rejected such claims as inadequate. This article briefly reviews these recent cases, as well as prior precedents addressing source of income issues where necessary.

Do Local Source of Income Laws Apply to Section 8 Vouchers?

New York City

The New York City Administrative Code provides that landlords receiving local property tax abatements for affordable housing may not discriminate against voucher holders. In 2008, the New York City Council amended the Administrative Code to further prohibit housing discrimination by all landlords, except for owners of buildings containing fewer than six units, based on lawful source of income, defined to include income derived from Social Security, or any form of federal, state, or local public assistance or housing assistance including Section 8 vouchers. A recent New York trial court decision held that this provision applied to both current residents and new applicants with Section 8 vouchers and that the local law was not preempted by federal law.

District of Columbia

The D.C. Human Rights Act prohibits owners of housing accommodations from refusing to rent to someone on the basis of source of income, which includes “federal payments.” In Bourbeau v. Jonathan Woodner Co., a federal district court, in rejecting the landlord’s motion to dismiss, found that a Section 8 voucher applicant had stated a claim that the landlord’s refusal to rent to her because of her Section 8 status could violate the local source of income law. In so doing, it dismissed the landlord’s characterization that the local law effectively mandates participation in the Section 8 program. It noted that “landlords remain free not to rent to voucher holders provided they do so on other legitimate, non-discriminatory grounds, such as an applicant’s rental history or criminal history,” or the need to charge rents higher than allowed under the program. The court also rejected the landlord’s related attempt to frame a federal conflict preemption defense, relying on the strong line of prior cases to that effect.

California

The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) makes it unlawful “for the owner of any housing accommodation to discriminate against...any person because of the...source of income...of that person.” FEHA defines “source of income” as “lawful, verifiable income

Diagonal Realty, LLC, 872 N.E.2d 860 (N.Y. 2007) (holding that landlord’s acceptance of Section 8 is a “term and condition” of lease within meaning of local rent stabilization law, so that renewal lease must contain that term. Moreover, it held that federal law requiring good cause for eviction only during Section 8 lease term does not preempt tenant’s right to renewal lease that includes landlord’s acceptance of Section 8 nor the nondiscrimination provisions of NYC’s J-51 tax abatement program).

In addition to holding that "lawful rent payment" clearly encompassed Section 8, Franklin rejected the landlord's argument that refusal to accept Section 8 because of the program's administrative burdens was not illegally discriminatory.

Landlord Claims that Rejection Was Based Upon Poor Credit or Insufficient Income

New Jersey

The New Jersey courts have issued several decisions exploring the interrelationship between the state's source of income protection and landlord practices that seek to utilize credit history to deny applications from certain voucher holders. The New Jersey Law Against Discrimination (LAD), passed in 1981 and revised in 2002, has been interpreted to prohibit discrimination because of status as a Section 8 recipient, and at least one court has held that the refusal to rent based on alleged poor credit was pretextual. Some cases also suggest that the LAD prohibits discrimination for reasons necessarily related to Section 8 voucher receipt, such as the program's alleged administrative burdens, or for reasons such as credit problems that are unrelated to an applicant's ability to satisfy the applicant's actual rent obligations.

The initial version of the LAD prohibited discrimination "because of the source of any lawful income received by the person or the source of any lawful rent payment to be paid for the house or apartment." However, it also initially included an exception permitting landlords to refuse to rent "because of...creditworthiness." In September 2002, the original LAD was repealed and reenacted without the explicit "creditworthiness" exception. The LAD now makes it unlawful to "refuse to sell, lease, assign, or sublease or otherwise deny to or withhold" any real property "because of the source of any lawful income received by the person or the source of any lawful rent payment to be paid for the real property." In 1999, the New Jersey Supreme Court had construed the initial version of the source of income protections in Franklin Tower One, L.L.C. v. N.M., holding that a landlord's refusal to accept Section 8 from a current tenant who became program-eligible constituted unlawful discrimination. The court's reasoning was based on the plain language of the LAD, as well as the state's policy of protecting low-income tenants. The court found further support in the New Jersey Governor's press release, characterizing the act's purpose to protect "tenants receiving governmental rental assistance." In addition to holding that "lawful rent payment" clearly encompassed Section 8, Franklin rejected the landlord's argument that refusal to accept Section 8 because of the program's administrative burdens was not illegally discriminatory. The court noted that the program requirements were not overly burdensome, particularly considering the numerous rental property regulations already imposed on landlords by the state.

Two years later, a New Jersey trial court revisited the original source of income law, finding that a landlord's denial of a Section 8 recipient's application based on allegedly poor credit was a pretext for illegal source of income

The court found that creditworthiness only relates to landlords' "legitimate concern that a prospective tenant has a reliable and steady source of income to fund rent payments and satisfy the other financial requirements of a lease."

In response to the discrimination claim, the landlord argued that denial based on poor credit fell within the original statutory exception for denials based on "creditworthiness," a term which landlords could define under their "business judgment." Although the first version of the LAD permitted denials based on "creditworthiness," the court was careful to ensure that landlords could not simply define the term to their advantage. The court noted that as a remedial statute, the LAD's protections must be construed liberally and the exception for lack of creditworthiness construed narrowly. In so doing, the court found that creditworthiness only relates to landlords' "legitimate concern that a prospective tenant has a reliable and steady source of income to fund rent payments and satisfy the other financial requirements of a lease."

Using this definition, the court then examined the landlord's assessment of the applicant as credit unworthy, rejecting the landlord's reliance on the cursory credit report showing small debts for necessary medical expenses, and noting that it never contacted past landlords and did not apply uniform and objective application standards. Although Landmark West withdrew its allegation of insufficient income, the court found it significant that at trial the manager expressed concern that the applicant would be unable to pay rent if she lost her voucher.

Because the applicant's Section 8 voucher ensured her ability to pay rent, and because she was able to pay the security deposit, the court concluded that the landlord had not established "any rational relationship between the plaintiff's credit report and Landmark West's legitimate concern that plaintiff has the means to pay the rent." Accordingly, the court found that the applicant's allegedly poor credit was a pretext for denial on the basis of "economic status, including her unemployment, lack of sufficient income and her participation in the Section 8 program." Holding that Landmark West thus illegally discriminated based on "the source of ... lawful rent payment," the court required it to enter into a lease and comply with all reasonable Section 8 program requirements.

A subsequent decision, Pasquince v. Brighton Arms Apartments, clarified the circumstances in which credit-related denials may be nondiscriminatory and thus legitimate. In Pasquince, a landlord had denied a disabled Section 8 recipient's rental application based on his credit report, which included unpaid utility bills, an eviction for non-payment of rent and a $2,922 debt owed to a prior landlord. The landlord informed the applicant that he could contact the credit reporting agency to dispute his credit report. Although the New Jersey Legislature revised the LAD between the T.K. decision and the 2005 Pasquince decision to delete the creditworthiness exception, the court found no evidence that this revision was intended to prevent landlords from ever denying applicants based on poor credit.

The Pasquince court held that lack of creditworthiness was not a pretext for illegal discrimination based on the "source of any lawful rent payment." Key to distinguishing T.K. factually were that Brighton Arms applied written application standards, presented consistent reasons for rejecting Pasquince's application, exempted Section 8 applicants from the minimum income requirements, and rented to other Section 8 tenants. Moreover, Pasquince's unpaid utility bills and eviction for nonpayment supported a conclusion that he was not creditworthy. In discussing the significance of past rent nonpayment, the court rejected an unpublished opinion holding that landlords may not consider a tenant's creditworthiness where a voucher would pay at least 50% of the monthly rent. The court noted that voucher recipients must still pay their portion of the rent, and that past nonpayment reasonably suggests they will be unable to do so in the future, certainly sound reasoning if the past nonpayment accrued during a subsidized voucher tenancy.

In another more recent case, Miller v. Brookside at Somerville, LLC, the court addressed similar issues in affirming the lower court's denial of a preliminary injunction. The tenant claimed that the landlord violated the statute and public policy when it used a point-based formula to deny his application based on an erroneous credit report and wrongfully refused to examine the tenant's actual credit history.

The court again affirmed that it is lawful for landlords to use creditworthiness as a selection criterion for Section 8 tenants and that rejection based on a poor credit history did not violate the LAD. As to whether the trial court should have required the landlord to consider the accuracy of the credit history, the court found no abuse of discretion by the trial court in refusing the injunction, because the tenant had no legal claim to require the owner to use accurate credit reports. However, the court did provide some guidance for the lower court as the case proceeds, stating that "the lawsuit relating to plaintiff's allegedly successful dispute over the security deposit and his landlord's action to regain possession of his rental unit for personal occupancy do not appear to pertain to the applicant's prior ability or inclination to pay rent. Accordingly, reliance on those items would provide little insight into an individual's creditworthiness." The court also suggested that the tenant could obtain a copy of the report from the credit agency and dispute its accuracy under the Federal Fair Credit Reporting Act. In addition the court suggested the option of joining the reporting agency as a party.

Although the decision in Franklin Tower One clarified that New Jersey's source of income definition covers Section 8 vouchers and is not preempted, the subsequent decisions in T.K., Pasquince and Miller suggest that courts are more likely to find that denials based on poor credit are nondiscriminatory if landlords consistently use written screening standards and make consistent statements regarding applicants' rejection. Similarly, whereas outstanding debts due to medical expenses are likely inadequate to show poor credit that would justify rejection, evictions and debts related to prior tenancies may be found nondiscriminatory, especially if they also involved subsidized tenancies, even though vouchers make apartments more affordable to recipients.

The Connecticut source of income statute has been interpreted as prohibiting landlords from rejecting applicants for reasons related to their receipt of Section 8.

Connecticut

Like the New Jersey law, the Connecticut source of income statute has been interpreted as prohibiting landlords from rejecting applicants for reasons related to their receipt of Section 8, including program requirements, and related to income requirements that do not consider voucher participants' personal share of the rent. Connecticut law prohibits landlords from refusing to rent or offering different terms, conditions, or privileges based on "lawful source of income," and from advertising any such preferences or limitations. The statute defines source of income as "income derived from Social Security, supplemental security income, housing assistance, child support, alimony or public or state-administered general assistance." The statute further specifies that its provisions "shall not prohibit the denial of full and equal accommodations solely on the basis of insufficient income."

Back in 1999, in Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities v. Sullivan Associates, the Connecticut Supreme Court had held that a landlord's reluctance to accept the terms of the Section 8 lease was not a legitimate basis for denial, and that a landlord may only consider a voucher holder's personal rent obligation and other reasonable rental expenses when assessing sufficiency of income. In that case, Sullivan had denied applications from two Section 8 tenants, citing their failure to meet Sullivan's minimum income requirements, and noting that the required security deposit exceeded the maximum 57 At the time of the denial in 1994, federal regulations required prospective Section 8 renters and landlords to use a standardized lease and addendum in order to participate in the Section 8 program. 24 C.F.R. § 882.209(d)(1) (1994).

allowed by Section 8. In response to the Commission's discrimination allegations, Sullivan argued that its objections to terms in the standardized Section 8 lease constituted a non-discriminatory basis for denial. Sullivan further argued that its policy of denying applicants whose weekly incomes were not equal to a month's rent was authorized by the statutory exception for denials based on insufficient income.

In addressing the Commission's complaint, the court first noted that the law "makes mandatory landlord participation" in Section 8, while acknowledging that landlords may deny applicants for non-discriminatory reasons. To determine whether the statute was intended to allow denials if landlords objected to the Section 8 lease, the court examined the statute's legislative history. It held that to read such an exception into the statute would undermine the legislature's intent to provide low-income families access to the rental market, citing the legislature's awareness of Section 8 requirements at the time of enactment, as well as two failed attempts to amend the statute explicitly to include such an exception.

The court then evaluated Sullivan's argument that denials based on its minimum income requirements, which considered the entire rental obligation, were permissible under the statute's exception for "insufficient income." Since both the statute and its legislative history were silent, the court turned again to the statute's purpose and the law dictionary to support its conclusion that this exception allowed landlords to determine only whether applicants lack "sufficient income to give the landlord reasonable assurance that the tenant's portion of the stipulated rental will be paid promptly and that the tenant will undertake to meet the other [tenancy] obligations..." The case was remanded to allow the landlord the opportunity to show that applicants did not have sufficient income, considering their income, personal rental obligation, foreseeable utility expenses, and so forth.

Although Sullivan I did not ultimately resolve whether the applicants' income was insufficient within the meaning of the exception, the court revisited the issue early in 2008 in a separate case against the same landlord. In Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities v. Sullivan (Sullivan II), the court affirmed its Sullivan I holdings, and considered whether the landlord's denial of voucher holders, allegedly based on "insufficient income, bad credit, or bad attitude" were credible and non-discriminatory.

Applying a mixed-motives analysis to the landlord's defense, Sullivan II upheld the trial court's determination that Sullivan failed to prove it would have denied applicants even if they had not been Section 8 participants. Significantly, the court held that Sullivan's denial was not based on the applicant's ability to pay only their monthly portion of the rent, and that alleged poor credit was not a credible basis of denial, because it appeared as an afterthought and was based on a stale application that listed only a delinquent student loan.

As the Sullivan decisions make clear, the Connecticut source of income law prevents landlords from circumventing its protections by denying applications based on inherent Section 8 program requirements or based on alleged insufficient income or bad credit, where such reasons fail to account for the voucher subsidy or are not proven to be legitimate and non-discriminatory.

Courts Reject Landlords' Claim that Section 8 Program Is Burdensome

Montgomery County, MD

The source of income protections of the Montgomery County, Maryland, fair housing law also encompass Section 8 vouchers and, as interpreted by the Maryland Court of Appeals, set a high standard for landlords to prove that Section 8 administrative burdens are a viable defense to allegations of discrimination. Montgomery County law prohibits certain landlords from refusing to rent to any person based on "source of income," defined as including "any lawful source of money, paid directly or indirectly to a renter or buyer of housing, including income from... any government or private assistance, grant, or loan program," and the county interprets "source of income" as including Section 8 vouchers.

The landlord, Glenmont, had a policy of rejecting vouchers, confirmed by its refusal to rent an apartment to a Section 8 participant. After an administrative finding that Glenmont had unlawfully discriminated based on source of income was invalidated by a lower court, the Maryland Court of Appeals addressed two issues: (1) whether Section 8 was a source of income under local law; and (2) if so, whether landlords' objections to the administrative burdens of the program constituted a valid basis for denial.

*Montgomery County v. Glenmont Hills Assoc., 402 Md. 259, 260, 936 A. 2d. 325 (Md. 2007).
In considering whether the law's source of income definition covered Section 8, the court noted that the definition includes both government assistance, which unquestionably includes Section 8, and money "paid directly or indirectly to a renter." The court reasoned that although Section 8 Housing Assistance Payments are paid to the landlord rather than the tenant, the payment is "clearly and identifiably on behalf of the tenant," and "therefore constitutes money paid indirectly to the tenant." Therefore, the court concluded that the source of income definition encompassed Section 8 vouchers.

Analyzing the landlord's administrative burdens defense, the court noted the administrative body's determination that the program requirements complained of by the landlord were not unduly burdensome and therefore did not unduly interfere with the landlord's property rights. The court affirmed that administrative burden was not a proper defense in any event, because "if a landlord could avoid the mandate of the County's fair housing law with the defense of 'administrative burden,' then landlords could easily thwart the Council's intent underlying the law." The fact that most courts addressing the administrative burden defense have rejected it was also persuasive, as was the fact that the alleged burdens did not constitute a taking or a violation of due process. While also rejecting the owner's implied preemption claim, Montgomery County thus makes it harder for those landlords who seek to evade source of income protections for voucher holders by citing allegedly burdensome Section 8 program requirements.

Massachusetts

Going further than other states to preclude an administrative burden defense, the Massachusetts legislature has enacted a source of income law explicitly prohibiting discrimination based on the requirements of any housing subsidy program. Massachusetts law currently prohibits discrimination by "any person furnishing...rental accommodations" against "tenant[s] receiving federal, state, or local housing subsidies, including rental assistance or rental supplements, because the individual is such a recipient, or because of any requirement of such public assistance, rental assistance, or housing subsidy program." A prior version of the law had prohibited discrimination "solely on the basis of the tenant's status as a Section 8 recipient." In 1987, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts construed that version of the statute as allowing denials because of objections to Section 8 program requirements. In Attorney General v. Brown, the court held that a landlord's refusal to rent to a Section 8 participant because of objections to a standardized lease did not violate the anti-discrimination law, because although it was related to the requirements of the Section 8 program, the denial was not "solely on the basis of the tenant's status as a Section 8 recipient." In response to this unfavorable ruling, the state legislature amended the statute in 1990, eliminating the word "solely," and adding language prohibiting discrimination against housing subsidy recipients "because of any requirement of such...program."

In 2007, in DiLiddo v. Oxford Street Realty, the Supreme Judicial Court construed the amended source of income law. Reversing the lower court, the court held that a lease term mandated by a state housing voucher program was a program requirement, making unlawful the landlord's refusal to execute a lease based on objections to the lease terms. The court declined the landlord's request to read into the statute an exception allowing landlords to reject participants in any program that would cause a landlord "substantial economic harm," finding it without statutory support. The court noted that in light of the 1990 statutory amendment, the legislature had clarified that "both kinds of housing discrimination that this court had parsed so carefully in Brown were now unlawful," regardless of any alleged non-discriminatory reasons.

Glenmont also complained of the following Section 8 Housing Assistance Payment contract terms: (1) PHA may terminate assistance to tenant on various grounds, and if so, the lease will automatically terminate without notice to the landlord; (2) if HAP contract terminates for another reason, the lease terminates without notice to the landlord. Conclusion

For those jurisdictions that have determined that Section 8 is covered by local laws preventing source of income discrimination, the litigation has now become focused upon the landlord defenses that a family may be rejected for other factors, including poor credit or insufficient income, or that its basis for rejecting applicants is non-discriminatory because the program is burdensome. While recent decisions have unanimously found that Section 8 program requirements alone are insufficient to justify rejection of Section 8 applicants, the issues of whether a landlord may reject assisted applicants for poor credit or insufficient income continue to evolve. In most cases, courts are requiring a demonstrated relationship between a poor credit report and a legitimate concern about the tenants' ability to make future payments of their share of the rent. Other related issues remain unresolved, such as how to handle erroneous and unreliable credit reports. These recent cases also demonstrate that determining the specific policies and practices at issue in each case, as well as the actual reasons for rejection, will always be critically important.

Using HUD's Updated Physical Inspection Scores to Preserve Threatened Multifamily Properties

One vital aspect of affordable housing preservation is ensuring the proper physical and financial maintenance of projects to avoid loss of the property. The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) created its current inspection standards for multifamily properties a decade ago, as part of its 2020 Management Plan.1 HUD also created the Real Estate Assessment Center (REAC) and the Enforcement Center, both located in HUD Headquarters, to address problems presented by noncomplying properties. The REAC evaluates the financial and physical condition of all HUD-funded public and assisted housing developments. The Enforcement Center takes action against troubled developments that fail the financial and physical inspection standards.2 Enforcement actions may include termination of the project-based contract. Understanding the standards and enforcement can help advocates take action to preserve affordable housing.

REAC's physical condition standards help determine if a development is decent, safe, sanitary and in good repair. Inspectors review the site, building exterior, building systems, dwelling units, common areas, and health and safety concerns.3 The standards neither include state or local housing codes, nor do they supersede or preempt them.4 While the REAC process also encompasses financial and management issues, physical conditions create the most common risk of enforcement action that could lead to precipitous termination of the project-based Section 8 contract and displacement of the residents.

Under the REAC physical inspection scoring system, all multifamily housing properties are rated on a 100-point scale, resulting in rankings as either a Standard 1 (90 points or higher), Standard 2 (80 to 89 points), or Standard 3 (fewer than 80 points) performing properties. Standard 1 performing properties are required to undergo physical inspection only once every three years; Standard 2 performing properties, once every two years; Standard 3 performing properties are inspected annually.5 The regulations also require that Standard 1 and 2 performing properties address any health and safety

Do Your Local Laws Ban Discrimination Based on Source of Income?

June 18, 2013

In the July 2013 lesson, Fair Housing Coach explains how to comply with fair housing laws banning discrimination based on source of income. Federal fair housing law doesn’t prohibit discrimination based on source of income, but an increasing number of states and municipalities have added these provisions to their fair housing or civil rights laws in recent years.

The specifics of the laws vary, but they generally ban discrimination against applicants and residents because of where they get their money or financial support. Many—but not all—also cover housing subsidies, most notably Section 8 housing vouchers. The program is now called the Housing Choice Voucher program, but many still use "Section 8" to refer to the federal government’s housing assistance program.

Although federal law makes participation in the Section 8 program voluntary for private communities, fair housing laws in some jurisdictions make it unlawful to turn away individuals who use Section 8 housing vouchers to pay their rent.

Here are some tips excerpted from the July lesson on complying with laws banning discrimination based on source of income:

Get to Know State and Local Law. Find out whether your community is subject to state or local laws banning discrimination based on source of income. Currently, 12 states and the District of Columbia include protections based on source of income in their fair housing or civil rights laws. Even if it’s not covered under state law, check whether it’s included in any county and municipal laws that may apply to your community.

And ask your attorney for details to determine what the law covers—and specifically what it says about Section 8 housing vouchers and other housing subsidies.

Don’t Reject Applicants Based on Source of Income. To comply with laws banning discrimination based on source of income, make sure that you don’t turn away applicants simply because they are unemployed or receive financial assistance, such as rental assistance or disability benefits. Otherwise, you could trigger a fair housing complaint—worse, it still can be costly to resolve.

Watch Your Language. Make sure that your compliance efforts extend to what you say in your advertising—and how you respond to telephone or online inquiries—about your willingness to accept Section 8 housing vouchers or other forms of public assistance. The wrong message may trigger a fair housing complaint—or draw the attention of fair housing enforcement officials or organizations, who are monitoring online advertising for compliance with state and local laws banning discrimination based on source of income.

Follow Standard Procedures Regardless of Source of Income. It’s unlawful to refuse to allow a prospect to apply to live in the community—or to impose procedural hurdles that make it more difficult for prospects with housing assistance to get through the application process. Follow standard policies and procedures when dealing with prospects and applicants to ensure that every prospect visiting your leasing office is treated the same way, regardless of their source of income.

Apply Standard Screening Policies. Source-of-income laws ban discrimination against applicants because of where they get their income—not the amount of their income. You may ask about the source of the applicant’s income, as long as you don’t discriminate based on that information.

Apply the Same Terms and Conditions, Regardless of Source of Income. In jurisdictions where the laws include protections for housing subsidies, it would be unlawful to require Section 8 voucher holders to pay a larger security deposit or higher rent than that required of other residents.

It would also be unlawful to treat residents differently or enforce community rules and policies more strictly against residents based on their source of income.

Press Release

High Rents Make Housing Unaffordable for Most Delaware Renters

Delaware Rents Remain Out of Reach for Working Families

Dover, Delaware - Renters in Delaware need to earn $20.09 per hour in order to afford a basic apartment here, according to a report released today that compares the cost of rental housing with what renters can really afford.

The report, Out of Reach 2014, was jointly released by the National Low Income Housing Coalition, a Washington, D.C.-based research and advocacy organization, and the Delaware Housing Coalition. The report provides the Housing Wage and other housing affordability data for every state, metropolitan area, combined non metropolitan area, and county in the country. The Housing Wage is the hourly wage a family must earn, working 40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year, to be able to afford the rent and utilities for a safe and modest home in the private housing market.

THE MINIMUM WAGE
Working at the minimum wage in Delaware, a family must have 2.8 wage earners working full-time, or one full-time earner working 111 hours per week, to afford a modest two-bedroom apartment.

DELAWARE RENTER HOUSEHOLDS
The typical renter in Delaware earns $15.01, which is $5.08 less than the hourly wage needed to afford a modest unit.

27% of Delaware households (91,288 are renters. An estimated 59% of renter households (or 53,860) in Delaware do not earn enough income to afford a two-bedroom unit at the Fair Market Rent (FMR).
DELAWARE RANKS #11 OUT OF 50
This year, Delaware is the eleventh most expensive of the 50 states when ranked by their two-bedroom housing wage. The National Housing Wage is $18.92.

NONMETRO AREAS HOUSING WAGE IS #10
Delaware has the tenth highest combined nonmetro area housing wage among the 50 states. It is $16.04.

NATIONAL HOUSING TRUST FUND
Sheila Crowley, President and CEO of the National Low Income Housing Coalition, says that there is a role the federal government can play in easing the financial strain faced by low income renters.

"The federal government has used the tax code to make homeownership easier. In reality, the benefits are largely going to higher income people with million-dollar homes. It's time to make housing policy work better for middle and lower income people by reforming mortgage interest tax breaks and directing the savings to the National Housing Trust Fund to build and preserve homes affordable to the lowest income Americans."

High Rents Make Housing Unaffordable for Most Delaware Renters
Delaware Rents Out of Reach for Working Families

The Housing Wage

The State’s Housing Wage is $20.09.

The Housing Wage is the hourly wage a family must earn - working 40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year - to be able to afford rent and utilities on a safe and modest two-bedroom unit in the private housing market.

The report, Out of Reach 2014, was jointly released by the National Low Income Housing Coalition, a Washington, D.C.-based research and advocacy organization, and the Delaware Housing Coalition. The report provides the Housing Wage and other housing affordability data for every state, metropolitan area, combined non-metropolitan area, and county in the country.

Rents

In Delaware, the Fair Market Rent (FMR) for a two-bedroom apartment is $1,044. In order to afford this level of rent and utilities — without paying more than 30% of income on housing — a household must earn $3,482 per month or $41,778 annually. Assuming a 40-hour work week, 52 weeks per year, this level of income translates into the Housing Wage of $20.09.

The Minimum Wage

In Delaware, a minimum wage worker earns an hourly wage of $7.25. A full-time, minimum wage worker can afford a monthly rent of $377. In order to afford the FMR for a two-bedroom apartment, a minimum wage earner must work 111 hours per week, 52 weeks per year. Or a household must include 2.8 minimum wage earners working 40 hours per week year-round in order to make the two-bedroom FMR affordable.

In Delaware, the estimated mean (average) wage for a renter is $15.01, which is $5.08 less than the hourly wage needed to afford a modest unit. In order to afford the FMR for a two-bedroom apartment at this wage, a renter must work 54 hours per week, 52 weeks per year. Or, working 40 hours per week year-round, a household must include 1.3 workers earning the mean renter wage in order to make the two-bedroom FMR affordable.

27% of Delaware households (91,288) are renters. An estimated 59% of renter households (or 53,860) do not earn enough income to afford a two-bedroom unit at the Fair Market Rent (FMR).

Delaware Ranks #11 Out of 50

This year, Delaware is the eleventh most expensive of the 50 states when ranked by their two-bedroom housing wage. The National Housing Wage is $18.92.

Nonmetro Area Housing Wage is #10

Delaware has the tenth highest combined nonmetro area housing wage among the 50 states. It is $16.04.
